OLINDA REPORT of the Regional Conference “Historic Urban Landscapes in the Americas” Olinda, Brazil, 12 to 14 November 2007

Preamble

The Olinda Report is the outcome of the regional conference on “Historic Urban Landscapes in the Americas”, which was held from 12 to 14 November 2007 in Olinda, Brazil, hosted by the Brazilian Ministry of Culture’s Institute for National Artistic and Historical Heritage (IPHAN), the Municipality of Olinda, the UNESCO Brasilia Office and the World Heritage Centre with its partners, and was attended by more than 70 experts and professionals from 20 countries.

This meeting continued the regional consultations on the subject of Historic Urban Landscapes (HUL) and the 2005 Vienna Memorandum as a basis and work-in-progress to improve existing tools for the preservation of historic cities and their urban and natural landscapes. It followed previous regional meetings held in Jerusalem (June 2006) and Saint Petersburg (January 2007).

The rich natural landscapes and seascapes of the Americas have been predictors of the settlement patterns and ways of life. It is a continent which has indigenous, urban and historic traditions, currently constituted of young nations. All participants expressed concern for the rapid urbanization, distribution of income and lack of equity that threaten the social, cultural and economic fabric in the Americas.

The participants welcomed the deepening of definitions of cities, landscapes and urban spaces. They recognized that preservation and conservation of historic cities, towns and villages is a sustainable process and should address current issues of climate change, pollution, ecosystem degradation, resource scarcity and transportation challenges as drivers of urban issues.

Background & Rationale

Until now historic towns and inner cities have been treated under the category of “groups of buildings” as defined in Article 1 of the 1972 World Heritage Convention and Article 45 of the Operational Guidelines: “groups of separate or connected buildings which, because of their architecture, their homogeneity or their place in the landscape, are of outstanding universal value from the point of view of history, art or science.”

However, the traditional notion of groups of buildings, historic ensembles or inner cities, identifying them as separate entities within a larger whole, is not sufficient to protect their characteristics and qualities against fragmentation, degeneration and, eventually, loss of significance. The urban heritage of historic cities is considered to be a human, social, natural and cultural accumulation that goes beyond the notion of “groups of buildings”. Cities are complex and often embody an accretion of diverse cultures and traditions, and therefore could also be included in the category of “sites”.

“Sites” are defined in the World Heritage Convention as “works of man or the combined works of nature and of man, and areas including archaeological sites which are of outstanding universal value from the historical, aesthetic, ethnological or anthropological points of view.”

The adoption of “sites” as an additional category for nomination of historic cities would facilitate a holistic approach to heritage conservation. To underline the increased levels of complexity, layering and inter-relationships, the term of Historic Urban Landscape was introduced in the ‘Vienna Memorandum’, which was welcomed by the World Heritage Committee at its 29th session in July 2005 (Durban, South Africa) and subsequently adopted in the ‘Declaration on the Conservation of Historic Urban Landscapes’ by the 15th General Assembly of States Parties to the World Heritage Convention.<sup>1</sup> A broad approach seems more appropriate to deal with the management of change in complex urban environments that are characterized by highly dynamic processes.

Consensus was reached on the following key elements during the three-day debate:

1. The consideration of “landscape” as a broad construct to extend conservation beyond the accepted boundaries of the historic cities and urban areas;
2. The recognition of the city as a layering of significances;
3. The acceptance of the multiple dimensions of identity, in places where it can strengthen communities, and as a way to express genius loci;
4. The importance of integrating intangible aspects of urban culture;
5. The recognition that change is an inherent part of urban development and conservation therefore is integral to the management of this evolution in an historical area requiring continuity and coherent substitution;
6. The need to consider environmental, economic, social and cultural sustainability in the process of conservation and development, which is an essential goal in the urban process and in achieving equity;
7. The participation and engagement of all stakeholders, be they citizen, community, expert or governmental, was considered essential in making urban conservation meaningful and successful, aided by educational initiatives;
8. The need of multi-disciplinary cooperation to address the range of values and issues that form a cultural system.

It was noted that issues of integrity and authenticity in historic urban landscapes remain unclear and require an integration of tangible and intangible assets to achieve full understanding. The conception of boundaries in relation to core, buffer and setting, must move beyond current notions to embrace holistic constructs. Greater emphasis needs to be placed on the implications of proposed urban conservation and development, including explicit assessments of institutional and financial gaps and the management strategies and instruments that are needed to ensure urban conservation.

Therefore, existing conservation processes and methods applied to heritage cities, while helpful, are insufficient to meet contemporary and emerging needs. In response to these needs and issues an updating of recommendations and guidelines is required. Outcomes are desired and a sharing of methodologies and case studies is urged. A diverse, robust tool kit is needed and should be the focus of collaborative efforts. To meet the specific needs of historic cities, tools to include policies, programs and interventions, should be shaped and adapted in an open creative exchange in the near term.

Accepted by acclamation,
Olinda, Brazil – 14 November 2007.
